Yes say. I think so. But what I think is that, in Spanish, you have to write with accents and with all the signs of correspond in most of the time. People don't use those things ignores them.

No one else I see is that the Skype Transfer. You can't place the commas where they go.

Yeah. No, that's true. Punctuation with dictation doesn't really go well.

Exactly.

Now, what are the things that you and I've noticed kind of playing around, this is that when I speak in English it translated into Spanish pretty well and when you speak Spanish it translates it in the English pretty well. And I can generally understand what you're saying, but the other way around, it just kind of sounds ridiculous at times it gets some, but how would you rate the two directions of translation.

Well, at first, it seemed to me that translated better English to Spanish. But now I see that the deficiencies are the same in both directions. Well, it shows that it is a new program that is still in its early days and that are improving and now Microsoft nice to meet you.
